MEET THE FAN DESIGNER

How Alexis Dos Santos (LEGO® Ideas name Tkel86) from Portugal finds enough hours in the day for his job as a programmer and web designer is a mystery to us. With an extensive portfolio of intricate MOCs (My Own Creations), this Fan Designer keeps busy!

"In my free time, I love doing anything that mixes creativity with ingenuity – LEGO building, electronic projects, woodworking, drawing, graphic design, 3D models and sculpting. I love reusing materials for new purposes, like disassembling a LEGO set to create another. I always remember playing with LEGO bricks – when I was a child, I inherited a box full of pieces from a cousin, and from then on, I grew my collection until I was a teenager. I had what you call a 'dark age' away from the bricks from when I was 16 to 26. Then I rediscovered my passion when, by chance, I visited a LEGO fan exhibition created by a community. I ended up joining them, and this hobby grew exponentially. This project took about six months. I've always admired Tintin, and a co-worker inspired me to recreate this model in LEGO bricks. I used some Technic parts to obtain the fittings for the legs and the top cone. I like that the model uses round and conical elements made from multiple pieces, as it is always a challenge to be able to reduce visible gaps with relatively complex fittings. Some of these elements in red were difficult to find! After I shared it on the LEGO Ideas website, my plan was to keep refining it, but little by little, while I was busy working on other projects, it reached 10,000 supporters. I love it when models combine mechanised movements and beautiful aesthetics. I hope fans will love the final model's wow factor."

AN EXPLORER ON THE MOON!

The red-and-white chequered rocket from Destination Moon (1953) and Explorers on the Moon (1954) remains one of the most recognisable symbols from The Adventures of Tintin. In the story, Tintin, Captain Haddock, Snowy and Professor Calculus embark on a daring journey to explore the dark side of the Moon, launching a groundbreaking rocket from the fictional country of Syldavia. When first published, the adventure transported readers into a future where human space travel felt within reach, at a time when an actual lunar landing was still only a dream. The rocket quickly became a signature image of technological progress and innovation, as Tintin and his friends captured the imagination of millions with a blend of adventure, suspense and modern science.

ART MEETS SCIENCE

The story seamlessly wove the characters' familiar banter, wit and humour into a suspenseful tale of espionage and scientific discovery. Because the rocket design, the Sprodj Atomic Research Centre and the journey's technical details were all based on real research available at the time, the story felt both novel and convincing, and the richly detailed scenes brought advanced science to a wider audience. Tintin's legacy is now preserved in places like the Musée Hergé, and the pioneering spirit of his rocket continues to inspire dreamers and explorers alike.

Many details were based on real science.

Hergé compiled extensive research materials and documents. Some are of unclear origin, like these black/white photos, that are classified under a separate 'Hergé Documentation' category.

THE LEGO® IDEAS TEAM

The fan model was really well done - it was also enormous! So, we agreed to remove the tower and focus on the rocket itself, take Alexis' model from Earth to space, and feature the characters in their iconic space suits, including, of course, a LEGO® Snowy figure! Hergé famously paid vigilant attention to detail and accuracy, and we wanted to do his work justice. The rocket is a 6-sided shape with a subtle curve from top to bottom. We explored countless different building techniques and angles to achieve this shape. The squares of the chequered pattern on the rocket surface are trapezoidal, and to stay true to the design, the smooth surface and authentic pattern were an exciting challenge. The fins were another technical part of the model. The solution for this was to use a reflected triangle for each of the fins to create the correct angle and lock them in to add strength to the model. For the rocket's top cone, we created a new cone element that's similar to the rocket's feet for consistency.

© Hergé / Tintinimaginatio 2026

We included a control room at the top of the rocket to show an iconic scene after take-off, when the characters see Earth from space for the first time. We made it as accurate as possible, with decorations, details and stickers, and we even managed to add the hatch for the door into the next level in the rocket.

'Translating' the characters into minifigure form was such a fun process. They have so much personality and comic history, so we narrowed it down to expressions that reflect this storyline. The spacesuits are inspired by Explorers on the Moon, and Thomson and Thompson have their green hair as a nod to a hilarious scene in the comic book!
